Then the Order of the Ebon Skull hunted her down. Their intent was to sacrifice her to some dark art. Arakad came back in to her life. He was passing by and heard her tormented screams. Arakad managed to sneak in and rescue Tatiana, taking her to Zento and leaveing her in the care of Lord Bishimi. He came back often to check on her as she slowly healed. And they fell in love. They were married in the Nujel'm Gardens. Tatiana was the happiest she had been in a long time. Mazewood became their home, adding a keep/armory to the town. Tatiana bore Arakad twins, a daughter, Sunflower, and a son, Gabe.

They still live in Mazewood, raising the two children.

Then one day, she went to the Yew Fel gate to help a friend with a piece of armor. She gladly repaired the armor and found others needing armor repaired. She gladly made a few repair deeds. When one of those present asked how much, she was a bit confused but said they were free. He then told her he had paid 500 gold for one repair deed, FIVE HUNDRED gold! Tatiana was shocked and horrified. What cost her three gold to make, shopping frugally in faction towns, someone was gouging others for 500. As a crafter, and proud of the skill, and being able to help others, she found this abhorrent. Such greed was just something she did not understand. To deny another basic necessities was just unfathomable. Tatiana started setting out free repairs and has daily for nearly a year. When she first started setting them out, a friend asked if she had any food. So she started adding food to the daily trips to Yew Fel gate. Many times the residents of the area thank her, some seek her death, and some help her. And as always, she strives to help others every chance she gets.
